VISIBLE LEARNING APPROACH

Visible Learning is an evidence-based approach to teaching and learning developed following the largest research project into teaching ever undertaken.

Professor John Hattie’s study enables teachers to focus their efforts on teaching strategies that have the greatest effect on student academic outcomes and achievements.

The principles of Visible Learning have informed teaching practices and formed the basis of teacher training courses for many years in schools across New Zealand and Australia. This has also been embraced in other parts of the world, such as Scandinavia and the United States. AISM is the first school in the world to achieve the status of being a fully certified Visible Learning School, due to the commitment of the teachers and leaders to ensuring that students receive the very best education possible.

Our students and teachers share a common language of learning, where learning intentions and success criteria are clear, feedback is valued and self-assessments for improvement are a constant. As a result, our students are adaptable and effective communicators, collaborators and creative thinkers.
